This was a great experience to showcase a little bit of my skills as a software developer. I also spruced up my resume in ways I normally would have glossed over. I applied some of the skills learned in this class to structuring the resume in a visually organized and appealing way. My old resume was very bland and did not stand out in the way this work does. I enjoyed a chance the practice writing a cover letter for targeting a real world internship opportunity.

This project was a nice way to learn a new simple website development tool, google sites, which I didn't know existed until now. I also recorded a screen cast for walking through my website which I guess wasn't even part of the assignment but I'll include the link anyway if you like. I feel that these are skills which I can absolutely use in the real world in my path seeking an internship as I get further along in my academic career.

Here's a link to the screen cast which I guess wasn't even part of the assignment but felt applicable:

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Opu-ymNVkUw